Patrick Myles, the husband of the decased, told the following story: "I and my daughter attend market in Wheeling, Yesterday we went down as usual and returned about eleven o'clock. It was a balt of my wife to meet us at the bars near the house, let them down and admit the wagon. She also assisted us in unloading the market wagon. When we came to the bars yesterday she did not appear as usual, which rather surprised me. When we got to the house we found her ironing, and I spoke something to her about getting dinner. In the afternoon about two o'clock she went out, and as evening came on and she did not return, I started to look for her, and continued my search for her untill 2 o'clock at night, when I lay down to rest awhile. At seven o'clock Mr. Tuttle called to me that he had found her hanging from a beach tree about three hundred yards from the house, on the hill side, in a woods near the cornfield. She had used her zinc.

At seven o'clock Mr. Tattle called to me that he had found her hanging from a beach tree about three hundred yards from the house, on the hill side, in a woods near the cornfield. She had used her ging he may spron to accomplish the deed, tying it aroung a limb, and as the ground upon which she stood declined toward the tree she swung off very easily although her feet were only about four inches from the ground. For some time past her actions have been rather peculiar, and during the last two weeks I have frequently remarked the strangeness of them.

Isaiah Tuttle, who discovered Mrs. Tuttle's body, testified to the circumstances of the finding.

Wm. Hill, Wm. Morgan, Walter Marshall and others also testified as to the finding of the body.

The jury after hearing the testimony rendered a verdict of "death by her own hands by hanging while temporarily insane."
